Your Homecourt Advantage for Destination Medicine

Google "destination medicine" and the search brings up a hundred and twenty million results in half a second. It's a vastly trending term as well as practice -- widely pursued and published -- and for good reason. It's also something the Fraum Center for Restorative Health has been delivering since before it was a ripped from the headlines popular approach to healing and health options.

Also referred to as medical tourism or destination healthcare, the concept refers to two different angles: Advanced procedures (equipment, specialists, etcetera) only available in highly specialized medical facilities and areas, or more discouragingly and unfortunately all too common, it refers to "patients for whom specialty care is driven by their employer's value-based healthcare coverage." Both of these are structured around limitation.

When the Fraum Center was first established 30 years ago, introducing restoration processes integrated in chiropractic, we knew we wanted to bring the same options to our patients they felt could only be reached at the nation's major medical centers or across borders. For some or many, this puts the best and proper care completely out of reach. But from our beginnings, we wanted to bring that approach to medicine to Hilton Head Island in the most efficacious way -- the right, curated team of specialists, labs, ongoing research and treatment development plans.

The body is a self-healing organism. Zero age cells have an innate intelligence and are the missing quotient to restorative health. The beauty of beginning to heal through this innovative, integrated, and restorative approach to medicine is that it isn't something you have to evaluate whether you're able to work into a travel schedule or budget -- not something a patient has to forego because it's only available in exclusive or out of reach destinations -- not something you have to choose to live without. It's something Fraum has been doing since we opened our doors on-island -- and something in which we continue to advance, so that our patients' "destination medicine" is right here at home, on Hilton Head. We're here to make things new, while our patients maintain homecourt advantage in their healing.
